think that it should be read either as debility or any kind of liability or minus mark.

SHRI P.K. MAHESHWARI: Madam, the idea of getting money from hawala itself shows that the money is not coming through proper channels, and not going out through proper channels. So, in case it is made fully convertible, we may stop this. Other countries have done it. Why are we not even thinking of it?

SHRI JASWANT SINGH: I think, it should not be related to the hawala which is altogether a different thing. Hawala will be indulged in, if you have criminally intended mind, as in narcotics smuggling, narcotics trade; hawala will be engaged in or trade indulged in, if it is terrorist-related; and the third is, where there is a deficiency of banking facilities. For example, I admitted to Mr. Rahman Khan a little bit earlier that if somebody wishes to remit money, say from the Gulf, and if his village directly doesn't have a facility to receive that money, then, naturally, he might indulge in that. We are trying to correct it; we are extending this facility to new areas. But to put all this on the head of hawala is, in fact, unjustifiable. As I shared with Mr. Sanjay Nirupam, a little earlier, our intelligence informs us that, in fact, the premium on hawala is almost non-existent and people are not seeking this.

SHRI MURLI DEORA: Madam, the rupee convertibility into capital account.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Question Hour....(Interruptions)...

SHRI MURLI DEORA: I would like to know whether that would help the country to raise more and more FDI investments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Question hour is over.
